The decision is considered highly damaging to the prosecution's case charged as accessories in Mr.

Agumo's killing.
One of the three presiding judges, Angusto Amores, said the raling was "definitely" a blow to the prosecution. Asked it is a large later blow to the case against the accessories, Judge Amores replied, "I think so."

General Ver's lawyer, Antonio Coronel, said he now planned to file a motion to dismiss the charges against his client. The defense pre-sentation in the trial is scheduled to begin next week, but, Mr. Coronel said, "You don't defend yourself against nothing."

The inadmissible testimony was given by the eight men before a citizens fact-finding board that concluded in October that Mr. Aquino was killed in a military conspiracy. The board report formed the basis of the prosecution case in the trial

The court decision came in response to a defense motion asking sponse to a care of the accessor ries be declared madmissible because of the constitutional protection against self-incrimination.

Mr. Aquino was shot to death at the Manila International Airport on Aug. 21, 1983, when he returned to his homeland after three years of yel-imposed exile in the United States. The military claimed that the opposition leader was killed by a lone gunman, Rolando Galman, who had been hired by Commi-

It Endorses Bid Of $793 Million From Texas Air

By Mark Potts

WASHINGTON - Trans World Airlines Inc. agreed Thursday to be taken over by Texas Air Corp. for $793.5 million in a merger that would create the United States' second-largest airline.

TWA, a major force in trans-Atlantic service, had been seeking a friendly buyer for the past month to block a bid by Carl C. Icahn, a New York financier. Mr. Icahn's investment group bought 11.2 million shares, or 32.8 percent of TWA's stock, and offered $18 for each of the remaining shares.

Under the merger agreement, TWA stockholders will receive $19 in cash and $4 in a new issue of 14.5-percent cumulative noncon-vertible preferred stock of TWA. It would be operated as an indepen-dent subsidiary of Texas Air and would retain its present management and name, the two companies

The merger is subject to approval of TWA shareholders, completion of financing and government approvals.

The acquisition would be another coup for Frank Lorenzo, chairman of Texas Air, who has taken advantage of deregulation to build an airline empire that already includes Continental Airlines and New York Air. The combination of TWA, Continental Airlines and New York Air would rank by most measures as the nation's second-largest airline, behind United Airlines and slightly larger than American Airlines. Together, the three carriers would have nearly 300 aircraft and 40,000 employees. Combined revenues would be $5 billion annually. By adding TWA, Texas Air would fill many of the gaps be-tween New York Air's primarily East Coast operations and Continental's coverage of the West, since TWA's primary domestic hub is in St. Louis.

The two-stage proposal, which would give an 11-billion DM tax cut in 1986 and a 9-billion DM cut in 1988, is set for a vote Friday in the Bundesrat, the lower house of parliament. It is widely expected to approve the measure,

U.S., in Shift, To Offer India Modern Arms

The policy change would end a 20-year hiatus in large-scale U.S. arms sales to India. The United States cut off most arms purchases by India in 1965 at the outbreak of the India-Pakistan war.

The new U.S. policy, which would be conditional on Indian acceptance of strict safeguards, became known as President Ronald Reagan and Mr. Gandhi, held a "get-acquainted meeting" at the White House Wednesday under Pentagon officials said the administration decision to supply ad-vanced military technology and weaponry goes beyond an agreement on the supply of civilian tech-nology signed last month. Most of the weapons that India imports are obtained from the Soviet Union.

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi told a joint meeting of Congress on Thursday that he had "deep reservations about the militarization of outer space." He also said that outside interference and intervention in Afghani-stan jeopardized stability in South Asia.

On the issue of Presiden Ronald Reagan's space-based defense initiative, he said: "We are concerned about any new dimension to the arms race. This only makes the ultimate objective more difficult to achieve. Hence our deep reservation about militarization of outer space."

Discussing Afghanistan, Mr. Gandhi indicated that he favored U.S. objectives there, but his analysis of the nature of the conflict differed from that of the Reagan administration.

He declined to criticize the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, saying only that India was "opposed to both foreign presences and pressures."

Nearly 32 years after the armi-suce that ended the Korean War, the first thing a traveler sees on arrival in this tightly sealed nation is a reminder of the destruction wreaked by American forces ini-tially under General Douglas A.

The evidence of war is even starker where the express from Beijing halts beside a red and white barrier manned by a soldier in the North Korean Army's olive green uniform. Between the shoreline and the first of the concrete supports for the bridge is a tangled mass of rusted steel. On shore, workmen are busy clearing it away for scrap.

HARARE, Zimbabwe (WP) — President Samora Machel of Mozambique has attended a surprise summit meeting here with the leaders of Zimbabwe and Tanzania amid reports that the two nations are considering military intervention to help Mozambique end an armed rebellion.

A brief, noncommittal statement was issued after the four-hour session Wednesday between Mr. Machel, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Wednesday between Mr. Machel, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe and President Julius Nyerere of Tamzania. Western diplomats said they believed that the three leaders had discussed ways in which Zimbabwe and Tanzania could militarily assist Mr. Machel in his struggle against guerrillas of the Mozambican National Resistance movement. The meeting underscored the deteriorating security situation inside Mozambique, where Mr. Machel's government has been locked in a five-year struggle with the guerrillas. The resistance movement, which until last year received support from South Africa, has forces operating in all 10 of the country's provinces and in the suburbs of the capital, Maputo.

FBI Says Spy Suspect Was Recruited, Then Took Classified Job

By Ben A. Franklin

New York Times Service NORFOLK, Virginia — Arthur J. Walker was recruited as a spy for the Soviet Union in early 1980, a month before he found a job in Norfolk with a private navy con-tracting concern from which he has admitted taking classified docu-ments, a federal agent has testified.

The agent, Beverly Andress of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said Wednesday that Mr. Walker, who retired from the navy in 1973 as a heutenant commander, was recruited for espionage by his younger brother, John A. Walker Ir., a retired navy communications

Both men, along with John Walker's son Michael, a Navy yeo-man, and Jerry A. Whitworth, a retired navy radioman on the West Coast, have been charged with es-

Arthur Walker had an unblemished record in the navy and a reputation as a quiet but steady community leader in suburban Virginia

But in January 1980, an automobile stereo radio sales shop that the two brothers incorporated in 1979 collapsed financially. The Walkers were left with unpaid bills and a $28,807 lien by the Internal Revenue Service for unpaid taxes.

U.S. Army Fears It Suffered From Navy Espionage Ring

The army team is working with the navy's, which has been listing what secrets the alleged espionage ning was in position to give the Soviet Union.

This effort comes at a time when some U.S. officials are warning that the damage to national security from the ring may extend to intelligence activities as well as the operations of the military.

The prime area of concern, officials said, is what the Soviet Union learned from intercepting messages and breaking through the codes, because of the information allegedly supplied by the ring. John A. Walker Jr. and three other present and former navy men are alleged to have been the members of the ring. Admiral James D. Watkins, the chief of naval operations, said Tuesday that the biggest loss to the navy was in communications. He said the navy "assumes" that the Soviet Union broke the codes designed to scramble messages trans-mitted throughout the fleet by teletype and telephone.

He said the navy was changing its secret communications gear on an "accelerated basis."

Navy officials said Mr. Walker's most sensitive jobs, which gave him access to coding equipment, were at the navy crypto repair school in Vallejo, California, in 1963 and as a radioman cleared for top-secret powered missile-carrying submarimes from 1962 to 1967.

Admiral Watkins said the navy's most vulnerable period was from 1962 to 1969, when Mr. Walker was in a position to pass tightly guarded secrets about military communications gear and submarine equipment to the Russians

When Mr. Walker retired in 1976, he was a communications systems officer in the headquarters of the Atlantic submarine fleet in Norfolk, Virginia, Also charged in the case are his brother Arthur, a etired navy lieutenant commander; his son Michael, a yeom aboard the nuclear carrier Nimitz and a longtime friend, Jerry A. Whitworth, a retired navy radio-

Admiral Watkins said he bebeved that the navy would replace coding equipment as part of the steps taken to minimize Intelligence sources said that although the coding equipment of which Mr. Walker had detailed knowledge is decades old, its components and operating characteris-tics could help the Soviet Union penetrate current communications

Two former top U.S. intelligence officials disagreed in estimating the potential loss from compror communications.

One said the presumed damage could have extended throughout the government, including top-se-cret intelligence channels. He said military services and government code and decode their messages The other former official said the coding equipment was constantly modified to prevent compromise. He said that reconstructing the machinery would not enable the Russians to break the codes.

By that test, much of the president's program falls short."

Mr. Kirkland and other union officials who appeared before the committee were especially critical of proposals to tax workers on a portion of the medical insurance premiums paid by their employers, to reduce the rate of capital gains taxation and to repeal the current deduction for state and local tax

New York Times Service MARJAYOUN, Lebanon The Israeli Army has taken foreign reporters for a visit to 21 Finnish soldiers of the United Nations who are being held hostage near here by an Israeli-supported militia.

The hostages, looking fit but tired Wednesday, are being held about two miles (three kilometers) north of the Israeli border in an old house with green window frames and an orange balcony. The house is next to the headquarters of the Christian-led militia, the South Lebanon Army, on the outskirts of Mariavoun.

Polish Plan Would Curb Academic Freedoms

By Michael T. Kaufman New York Times Service

WARSAW - The Polish government has announced proposed steps to curb academic freedom, and the minister of higher education has defended them as necessary retreats forced by the "anti-state" and "anti-Socialist" activities of some university circles.

Amendments in the university law, all of which are virtually certain to be approved by parliament, call for greater supervision of university life by the Ministry of Higher Education, limitation of tenure or junior faculty members, reduced participation in university self-government by students and nonteaching university employees and the reintroduction of loyalty and the transport of the military of the angular state of the Higher the angular state of the Higher the opposition and the transport of the Higher the angular state of the Higher the opposition and the transport of the Higher the Higher the transport of the Higher the transport of the Higher th

Italian Referendum: Shift in Party Power

By E.J. Dionne Jr. New York Times Service

ROME — The victory of Prime Minister Bettino Craxi's govern-ment in a referendum this week marked an important shift in the balance of political power in Italy and the twilight of a period of Communist assertion, Italian political leaders said.

As they maneuvered to take what dvantage they could, politicians said that the victory was likely to give the government a freer hand in economic policy, a belief that sent the stock market here soaring. They said that the result would force the Communists to reassess their strategy of confrontation and would strengthen the five-party governing coalition led by Mr. Craxi, a Socialist, and dominated by the Christian Democrats.

The 54-to-46-percent defeat Monday of the Communist-spon-sored referendum on Italy's system of indexing wages for inflation is likely to have its greatest effect on the Communist Party itself, offi-cials said, since the Communists also lost ground in nationwide local voting last month. Mr. Craxi exulted Tuesday night that the result of the voting was the paradoxical product of the aggressive policy by Communists against him and his government. "The government is stronger, thanks to those who wanted to weaken it," he was that the referendum was designed six months ago." The government, by winning 54 percent for what was once thought of as an unpopular decision, established clearly that it has a strong base of popular support, according to its supporters. The victory came on top of a 58-percent showing by the five coalition parties in last month's local voting.

Two events turned the tide toward the government, according to political leaders in Rome.

The first, Mr. Castagno said, was a improvement in the economic situation. The second was the declarations by Communists that they would seek a share of power if they did well in the local voting and the referendum. "That scared people," said Mr. Del Pennino.

The Communists, according to Mr. Del Pennino, do best as a protest party in alliance with other groups. But a majority of voters still are wary of allowing them into the national government.

The Communist Central Committee met Wednesday to discuss the results, and one member said he expected the party to enter a difficult period of reflection. The Communists have publicly pointed to the substantial affirmative vote as providing a large base of support in the North — but publicly, at least, there is total confidence that his plan will prevail.

North Korea: War's Legacy

At the same time, officials here seem aware that a burden of distrust must be cleared away if the 72-year-old Kim or Kim Jong II, his son, 42, whom he has nominated as his successor, are to see the country reunited.

Bringing American correspondents here seems related to this. North Koreans who do business in the West say they are hoping that trade with the United States, currently nil, will develop to help break down "hostile feelings."

A visitor can see quickly that the distrust is not all on one side. Suspicions of foreigners, especially Americans, are close to the surface, fostered by decades of propaganda that have told North Koreans to watch for foreign subversion. Hotel waiters, tourist guides and shop as-sistants make efforts to be friendly to visitors, but conversations are restricted to routine affairs.

When a visitor asks about crime in the capital, an official replies that there are no thieves but that the security police still occasionally catch "spies." The remark is made with a smile, but seems intended to make its mark.

Establishing contact with the people seems virtually impossible. Daily itineraries are tightly scheduled with little free time, and the hotel at which Westerners are lodged sits in a willow-fringed park alongside the Poten River, a long walk to the city center. Even walks to the river bank to watch fishing and canoeing are escorted, and it is plain that any attempt to head for a solo trip into town would not be

Inhumanity in Congress

Anyone truly concerned about reducing in-fant mortality and other suffering in the devel-oping world knows how important a contribution voluntary family planning programs can make to that effort, Unfortunately, under cover of protesting against reported instances of infanticide and coerced abortion in China, opponents of family planning programs have been promoting vaguely worded amendments that would effectively block U.S. support for this essential humanitarian aid.

Concerned legislators in both Houses -- led by Senator Nancy Kassebaum and Represen-tative Olympia Snowe — know that the amendments pushed by Senator Jesse Helms and Representatives Jack Kemp and Chris Smith are neither necessary nor suitable for preventing U.S. aid from flowing to any such coercive programs. Senator Kassebaum and Representative Snowe are sponsors of amendments that would block any U.S. money from flowing directly or through other agencies to Chinese population programs. Senator Daniel Inouye is offering proposals that would deal still more directly with any abuses in China.

Foes of family planning will not settle for these strong but straightforward measures. Senator Helms has already succeeded in add-ing language to the Senate foreign aid reauthorization bill that would end all support for UN population programs despite the fact that the Reagan administration has twice reaffirmed that no UN money is used for any abortionrelated activities. Representative Smith will attempt to add even more damaging amendments to the House reauthorization measure.

Representative Kemp has added seemingly innocuous language to a House supplemental appropriations bill that according to his stated interpretation of its meaning, would also cut off the UN programs that are the main or only source of population aid for many of the poorest countries. Still another Helms ploy unsuccessful thus far, defines abortion — not just coerced abortion but any legal abortion as practiced in the United States. Europe or any-where else — as a human rights violation that the president could combat with the full force of his constitutional powers.

Most senators and representatives under-stand that U.S. aid for foreign population planning is actually one of the best ways of reducing traditional reliance on abortion and infanticide. But, through a combination of inattention and fear of being branded as babykillers by the religious right, many have looked the other way while Senator Helms and his allies have tacked on their destructive amendments. These legislators may find this behavior convenient, but their consciences should remind them that it is also cowardly and cruel. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Finding Mengele Matters

Does it really matter whether some bones and teeth are the remains of Josef Mengele? Forensic studies may or may not confirm his son's claim, which is suspiciously convenient, that the Nazi criminal died six years ago in Brazil. They will not resolve the wider question: Why keep hunting for the old men who once ran Hitler's murder machine? That evil empire lies buried and its former servants pose no further threat. Even if Josef Mengele, the barbarous "angel of death" at Auschwitz, is still alive, it is as a reclusive fugitive. Yet they should be hunted down. It does matter.

To take the question at its narrowest, Dr. Mengele is a fugitive from justice in West Germany, subject to deportation from Brazil or wherever. But he is not simply an escaped murderer. He butchered tens of thousands and performed gruesome so-called medical experiments on his victims. To shrug him off as a harmless old man shrugs off the crime and the world's debt to his victims.

The United States bears a special obligation because it let a number of war criminals slip to safety through its refugee programs after World War II. In 1979, after that sorry story became known, the Justice Department created an Office of Special Investigations to give chase. Under Allan Ryan, its first director, the office tracked down and deported former Nazis living under assumed identities. It exposed the shameful postwar recruiting of war criminals by American intelligence agencies, among them Klaus Barbie. With strong congressional support, the search continues.

Some people argue against the program, saying that the former Nazis have led quiet. productive lives and probably suffer with punshing memories. Mr. Rvan argues otherwise: "I see no evidence that any of these men have been slightly discomfitted. let alone tormented, by their actions in the past ... I know of no Nazi war criminal who has come forth to say, 'At last you have found me out. Let me unburden my conscience."

Should there not be a statute of limitations for crimes of so long ago? No. As Mr. Ryan rejoins, that would diminish the nature of the crimes. As long as the war criminals survive. they need to be confronted with their deeds, reinforcing memory. That need is dramatized by the residents of Dr. Mengele's hometown in Bavaria: He may have been a bad man, they say, but that was 40 years ago, and besides. didn't the Americans kill a lot of people by bombing Dresden? The pursuit of justice is not just a service to the past. Present and future generations will benefit if butchers are hunted to the end of their days.

Love and Common Sense

When she was four weeks old, a baby named Mary Anne Monahan was adopted by Julia and Joseph Quinlan of Morris County. New Jersey. They christened her Karen Ann. She lived for 31 years, the last decade of which entailed nothingness for her and an extraordinary ordeal for her parents.

The Quinlans - mother, father, Karen Ann nally liable for removing the respirator, beand two younger children - lived what might cause the cause of Karen Ann's death would led an ordinary life until Karen Ann was 20. Then she was laid off from her job, began to drift a bit and drink a bit. Plenty of 20-yearolds do that; it is often part of growing up. Karen Ann never finished growing up. One day she mixed alcohol and tranquilizers, and her life, at least her sentient life, was over.

When Karen Ann entered her fifth month of irreversible coma, Mr. and Mrs. Quinlan asked that their child's respirator be disconnected. Let her be allowed to die, they asked the court. and Mrs. Quinlan brought two invaluable "with grace and dignity." A Superior Court judge refused their request, but the New Jersey

Supreme Court upheld it in a landmark decision. As long as medical authorities saw "no reasonable possibility" that Karen Ann would recover, the court said, her interest in having her life-support system disconnected exceeded the state's interest in keeping her alive. Nor. the court added, could anyone be held criminot be homicide but natural causes.

Karen Ann did not die: she lived nine more years. Mr. and Mrs. Quinlan, having found the courage to ask for their daughter's release, now had to find the courage to live with what was, in effect, her shell. They did. Karen Ann Quinlan has come to the peaceful death her parents wanted for her. And because of the suit they brought, so will many other terminally ill Americans. A line, less detectable than a thread of light across the sky, divides research on and deploy-ment of a "star wars" defense system. The administration has adamantly refused to put this matter on the table in Geneva, where the Soviets have made it their number one issue.

It is an issue that may never be resolved. The proposed defense system will prove difficult, if not impossible, to test fully. But much of the laboratory for the research is in the skies or in the hearts of vet-to-be-invented or yet-to-beprogrammed computers that must reach far beyond the current state of the technology. It has been estimated that it will take some 10 million lines of program instructions, the writing of which would require years of work by thousands of technicians, to get close to developing a Strategic Defense Initiative.

NATO allies have justifiable concerns that Mr. Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative will lead to an arms race and that it is a major obstacle to real progress toward getting arms reduction agreements at Geneva.

1910: Republican Party in Disarray WASHINGTON - No political divining rod can point to the word "harmony" in the Republican party. Senators Aldrich and Hale, who have decided to retire, appear to be the only happy persons in the organization. So deep has become the resentment between the three or four factions into which the organization has been ripped and so widespread has grown the fratricidal strife that to bring about even a semblance of party unification is beyond the power of any one man. A great many Republicans who have about abandoned hope of success at the approaching Congressional and State elections have but one "anchor to windward." They say that if Theodore Roosevelt shall get behind the party and the administration there may be a chance to win.

1935: Factory Explodes in Germany BERLIN - Hundreds of men and women are believed killed or injured in a series of explosions lasting five hours [on June 13] and which wrecked one of Germany's principal explosive factories, situated near Rheinsdorf, near Wittenberg, about 60 miles from here. About 3,000 workers employed by the factory were on the premises at the time and were trapped by the early explosions. Many are believed to be either dead or mutilated. All that could be learned with certainty was that 20 bodies have been recovered so far. The first explosion occurred at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the factory was working at full capacity. It is believed that a fire then started and that other explosions occurred at intervals until 9 o'clock, rendering approach impossible.

Most Wars Seem a Good Idea at the Time

PARIS — The Israeli army, defeated, has pulled its last units out of Lebanon three years and 654 Israeli deaths after it went in. No one has counted how many Lebanese and Palesinians are dead, wounded or homeless as the direct or indirect result of Israel's invasion of ebanon. It seemed like a good idea at the time. As the final Israeli units crossed the border, for the first time in three years rockets from Leba-non began to fall on Galilee. Israel is digging a huge trench to separate the two countries In Baghdad, the nights are interrupted by the

In Baghdad, the nights are interrupted by the explosions of surface-to-surface missiles from Iran. An Iraqi army of some half a million men is entrenched in the delta of the Tigris. Using mustard gas, as well as the best available European weaponry, it has, by gross slaughter, thus far saved Iraq from the mass onslaught of sacrificial and suicidal Iranian Revolutionary Guards incandescent with religious conviction.

To invade Iran was something else that seemed a good idea at the time. President Saddam Hussein thought be could throttle the threat of Shiite integrism in its cradle. He calculated that it would be a simple matter to overrun a disorga-nized Iranian army and topple the reactionary religious regime that had just taken power in Tehran. Today no end to his war is in sight.

There are a good many wars which, at the time people began them or when they rashly intervened in them, seemed to be good ideas. In 1914 Rupert Brooke could write, "God be thanked who has matched us with His Hour, and caught our youth, and wakened us from sleeping." Three years later he was writing about the blood that "at every job!... comes gargling from the froth-corrupted lunes, observed as reproduct." corrupted lungs, obscene as cancer ..."

In 1940 there were transmatized Germans who thought a new war a good idea. Intelligent men were terrified. "Havoc is in the air," one Prussian aristocrat, Friedrich Reck-Malleczewen, wrote in his diary in April 1939. "I have no doubt that worked out. Japan's aggression against China and quest for Asian empire ended in Japan's atomic defeat, with China, become Communist, awakened from its long sleep. The Spanish army's successful revolt against a left-wing gov-ernment produced civil war, 40 years of Spanish alienation from Europe and the eventual return to power in Madrid of a left-wing government. The Russian pact with Germany and invasion of Poland in 1939 freed Germany to defeat France and turn on Russia with an invasion that eventually left 20 million Russian casualties. The American intervention in Vietnam ended in panicky scrambles from the embassy roof in Saigon, and in Communist rule over Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. Had the United States done nothing in 1965, Cambodia, at least, might have preserved some measure of autonomy, and it would certainly have been spared genocide at the hands of the Khmer Rouge.

The Russian invasion of Afghanistan? One can almost hear the planners telling Leonid Brezhnev. "All it will take is a short, sharp shock. Brezhnev: "All it will take is a short, sharp shock. They're nothing but ignorant tribesmen." The Argentine invasion of the Falkland Islands? "The British are only bluffing. In any case, they could never bring a force all that way."

Obviously there are wars that succeed. But there are fart if any that an at relarned The odds.

there are few, if any, that go as planned. The odds are safely on the side of unpleasant supprise, confusion and a final outcome never imagined by those who decided to go to war. Good ideas about war are not to be trusted. What is to be trusted is what the Russian soldier said to the Yugoslav peasant who welcomed him with gifts in 1944: "Father, keep your bread and sail. Don't you know that I bring death?"

The United States is conducting a war of nerves against the Sandinist government in Nicaragua. The aim is to topple that regime. It is an aim that a war of nerves is insufficient to achieve.

Real war is what overturns governments. The logic of this is making its way in Washington.
The ability of the United States to invade Nicaragua and seize control of its cities and communications is beyond serious doubt. The disproportion of forces is flagrant. The U.S. Marine Corps alone is twice the size of the total active and reserve armed forces of Nicaragua. Would the operation, then, be "like falling off a log." as some American planners say?

In 1910, when the marines last invaded Nicaragua (to remain until 1933), there was no Cuban complication or Russian engagement in the Americas, Imperialism was respectable. It was thought inevitable. Small nations and their people expected to be dominated by big ones. The powers of Europe looked on with approval as the United States assured that foreigners and their property were respected in Nicaragua and that the country paid its debts to New York bankers.

Times have changed. There nonetheless are those in Washington who still believe in small wars as good ideas. What, after all, could go wrong? Ask Menachem Begin. Ask Saddam Hussein. Ask Lyndon Johnson and Richard Nixon. Ask that peasant, with his bread and salt.

South Africa: U.S. Opinion Leaves Reagan Behind

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON - Why is the U.S. Con-B gress in such revolt against President Reagan's policy on South Africa? Administration officials say the whole thing puzzles them. If they mean that, here is a clue. On March 21, police in Uitenhage shot into a group marching to a funeral and killed 20 people. That night Mr. Reagan had a press conference. and Sam Donaldson of ABC News asked him about "what appears to be a continuing wave of violence by the white minority government against the black majority population." The president answered, in part:

"I think to put it that way, that they were simply killed and that the violence was coming totally from the law-and-order side, ignores the fact that there was rioting going on on behalf of others there . . There is an element in South Africa that do not want a peaceful settlement of this, who want a violent settlement, who want trouble in the streets, and this is what's going on.

Where did Mr. Reagan get the idea that there was "rioting" before the police fired? Presumably from South African officials who claimed that the marchers threw stones and gasoline bombs. But the government itself appointed a judge. Donald Kanne-meyer, to investigate the massacre. He reported this week. He found no police officer wrongfully responsible for the killings, but his report is a devastating comment on the facts.

The claim of stone-throwing, the judge concluded, "was fabricated" in an attempt "to justify the shooting." Of 47 blacks killed and injured, 35 were shot in the back - a "disquieting" fact, he said. He found that the police had "deliberately" been equipped with weapons that kill instead of crowd-control devices such as tear gas and rubber bullets.

was ready to assert as "fact" what not even the South African government would maintain without an inquiry and which turned out to be a lie. That is the reality underlying the Reagan policy toward South Africa, and people know it. They do not want the United States to be on the side of racist governments that oppress the majority of their citizens and shoot unarmed people in the back. Mr. Reagan said on March 21 that he opposes apartheid and is urging change. But what realists see is a man whose instincts are on the side of the white government. That certainly is what South African blacks see. And it is what Pretoria sees, so it believes it can continue its oppressive policies without worrying about serious pressure from the Reagan administration.

South Africa's record since the Uitenhage massacre has been of continuing official violence. In one week in May three blacks died while in police custody or hours after being released. One was a union official, Andries Raditsela whose colleagues in the union said police beat him when they detained him. It can reach over fields in the country or over a mile of city blocks. There were times when I recognized the tension and frustration in the music and the drums and the singing that rose and fell suddenly and finally. The quietness that followed was not a satisfied one. knew that, and I was afraid. But those days came and went and the moods of all the people came and went, and nothing changed much, And for many years of uprisings was not in the patient's best inter-

We march to exact punishment, to denounce apartheid for the cruel and inhuman thing it is, to cry for change. Most of us don't want guns anywhere to force anything. But, I won-der, is it possible that with our chanting we are also encouraging the children there in some ugly way? And by so doing, do we unknowingly mock those who have traded their lives for a belief in peace on Earth and for each man his inalignable rights? Was it all a waste for them? Can it be possible for a child with a gun to set a whole country on fire?

So many questions. Fewer and fewer definite answers. I am afraid for relatives and others I know who still live there. Fire can spread so rapidly. There may be no way to recognize a friend, and no time to worry about that.

Romanians Could Use Some Help

By Nina Shea

N EW YORK — President Reagent has recommended renewal of Romania's most-favored-nation status - that is nondiscriminatory treatment on its exports to Americ - for another year. Congress ought or another year. Congress ought to hinge approval of his request on human rights improvements.

In Romania human rights take a beating. No dissent is allowed. No independent labor unions, citizens groups, scientific and legal or other professional associations can funcprofessional associations can funcprofessional associations can runc-tion. Not even underground presses survive. Ruling by decree, the regime controls virtually all aspects of life, intrading deeply into personal family and religious matters.

Yet Washington is soft on this Stalinism It rarely questions Romania's human rights abuses. Instead, it grants Romania trade privileges and loudly praises its relatively independent foreign policy. This prompted a public protest by David Funderburk, who recently resigned as the U.S.
ambassador to Romania, accusing senior administration officials of overior administration officials of overior administration officials of overior administration officials of overior administration of the product of the condense of t rating Bucharest's independence from Moscow while downplaying the harshness of its internal practices.

Romania does not hesitate to use brutal tactics to suppress dissent.
Usually it uses more subtle but note less efficient administrative sanc-tions. It punishes without the pretext of a trial, and coerces citizens simply by administrative order. Such measures include exile, forced labor, dismissal from jobs, eviction and denial of wages, food and medicine, Romania suppresses religion. It bans religious education for the young regulates distribution of Bi-bles, requires licenses for places of worship and presses believers to work on Christmas and other religious holidays. It is demolishing historic churches and monasteries. Dissident Roman Catholic, Protestant and Romanian Orthodox leaders have been imprisoned, even killed. While Romania maintains diplomatic ties with Israel and permits steady emigration of Jews, a recent decline in that emigration and the appearance of anti-Semitic publications have evoked concern.

Thousands of Romanians have een denied the right to emigrate, including those seeking medical treatment abroad or family reunification. Merely requesting exit permis-sion triggers such reprisals as job de-motion or dismissal, eviction and denial of essential goods and services. Ethnic Hungarians, the largest minority, are persecuted.

Conditions have been deteriorating alarmingly. With the media under direct government control, a new co-cree requiring police registration of private typewriters further restricts information. In 1984, West Germany uncovered a Romanian bombing plot against Radio Free Europe.

Most-favored-nation status pro-vides important leverage that should be used to obtain significant conces-sions in human rights performance. The Jackson-Vanik amendment links trade status with rights guarantees, Since 1975, Romania has had mostfavored-nation treatment without having to conform to Jackson-Vanik standards. Presidents annually waive the provision and Congress acquiesces after holding perfunctory hearings. Last year the House did not even bother with this gesture. Negotiations on enhancing the rights of Romanians who choose not to emigrate ought to precede renewal of most-favored-nation status. The Reagan administration should request specific reforms in diverse area and establish a definite timetable, and should temporarily suspend favored status until the talks are satisfactorily completed. Congressional trade committees would do well to hearings, and press for reforms. Few Americans advocate severing an important link with Eastern Furope. But Bucharest is unlikely to let that happen. President Nicolae Cesusescu personally sought trade benefits in 1975, and no doubt during his nation's current economic crisis he still prizes them.

Hector Guimard and His Art Nouveau Paris

It was the Castel Beranger at 14 Rue La Fontaine, Guimard's undisputed masterpiece, that is considered to have introduced the style to France.

The wrought-iron entry gate, with its graceful grill of curves opening onto the entry hall lined with sculpted stone panels, might alone have been enough to merit the prize for best facade of 1899, in a competition sponsored by the newspaper Le Figaro. (After the prize was awarded, Guimard announced his three guiding points of design: logic, harmony and sentiment. He also had postcards printed of the apartment and gave personal tours.)

The rest of the building is unusual as well: The window railings - usually black on Paris apartment houses — are turquoise, as is the rest of the building's ironwork and trim. The painter Paul Signac was one of the first occupants. "You'll love the blue staircase," he wrote to his friends.

Also on Rue La Fontaine, at number 60, is a charming, three-story, asymmetrical pri-vate home Guimard designed, and at 17, 19 and 21 is a block of apartments with black window railings of twining tendrils as intri-cately detailed as spider webs. The windows themselves, close examination shows, have slightly rounded corners. Guimard built his own home (1909-12) at 122 Avenue Mozart. The walls are never straight, but bend and flow like a sheet of paper in the breeze. It stands across from the Villa Flore, built more than a decade later, which shows Guimard moving in the direction of Art Déco.

Those buildings came at the tail end of the Art Nouveau movement (1909-1911). The peak of Art Nouveau design, the one that elevates ornament to symbol, was the Métro

A competition had been organized for the design of the Metro entrances, and even before this, there had been considerable debate over the designs. Charles Garnier - the architect of the Paris Opéra, warned against anything that would suggest industrial design and proposed entrances with antiquestyle pillars, preferably in onyx, bronze or

But the head of the Compagnie Générale du Métropolitain de Paris had been so smit-ten with the elegance and originality of the Castel Béranger that he decided to ignore the results of the competition, as well as Garnier's suggestions, and hire Guimard.

One of the most striking remaining examples of Guimard's Metro work is the entrance to the Porte Dauphine station. The arch is crowned with glass panels held up by thin iron beams; the effect is that of a transparent fan spread open at an upward angle.

Salvador Dali called them "divine entrances . . . by the grace of which one can descend into the subconscious region of the living, kingly aesthetic of the future." Not everyone was so enthusiastic. In the late 1930s many of the entrances were removed. The New York Museum of Modern Art acquired part of the Bastille station entry. And in Paris, many of the entrances remain in good condition and others have been

Y UIMARD also designed many other buildings in the Paris area, from Le Vésinet in the west to Villemoisson in the east. The stone house in Villemoisson, at 2 Avenue de la Mare-Tambour, is one of his most original creations, with its abundance of arches of varying sizes, curves and angles and topped by an oddly shaped tower. He also designed Art Nouveau-style houses in Lille and Lyon.

The concave, arched facade of his syna-gogue at 10 Rue Pavee, in the part of the Marais that has been Paris's Jewish quarter from medieval times, is more sober and less ornate than his private homes. Its shape suggests an altar, and is impressive for its solution of a difficult situation: a tall, sacred building on a narrow street, squeezed between two apartment blocks.

But his last houses in Paris, at 18 Rue Henri-Heine, and 36-38 Rue Greuze, built in the late '20s as Art Nouveau was going out of style, lack warmth and show little of the personality and originality of his earlier buildings. He withheld his signature from the brick building on Rue Greuze. After the decline of Art Nouveau he continued to design, but without great recognition or criti-cal success. He moved to New York in 1938. and died there four years later.

Not all of Guimard's houses have survived. One of his most lauded creations, the Castel Henriette, was destroyed in the 1970s. Maurice Rheims, who wrote the text for the

At 71, by act of he has become Mexico's foremost voice, its leading writer and intellectual and, as he now says of Jean-Paul Sartre, whom he knew in Paris in the 1950s, "a kind of moral

In Mexico City his presence is felt every-where in the intellectual world. His monthly magazine. Veulta, is a leading source of artistic and political commentary. He has won more awards than any other Mexican writer. His name is regularly mentioned and sometimes nominated for a Nobel Prize. He has published more than 30 volumes of poetry, essays and criticism.

His face is known to any Mexican television viewer. He is interviewed on subjects from history to politics, art and literature. Some subjects he now brushes aside in his pleasant, self-effacing voice, saying, "Do I have to talk about that again?" because last week he talked about it on television for an

And while one of his most famous acts was resigning the ambassadorship to India after 24 years in the diplomatic corps in 1968 as a protest against the Mexican government's massacre of hundreds of students in Mexico City, last year President Miguel de la Madrid honored him on his 70th birthday, calling him, "the pride of Mexico."

Paz, one of the few celebrated Mexicans who still lives in the center of the capital, where traffic and pollution run as thick and redolent as a Mexican mole sauce, sits in his comfortable study, sealed off from the noise of the nearby Pasco de la Reforma and explains that it has all been an accident. He was born across the street in what is now a shop-lined Disneyland of a tourist center called the Zona Rosa. All he ever wanted to do was to be a poet. He says he is not a Sartre. "Sartre was mainly an ideologue, a man of ideas. I am a man of sensibility. I hope I am a man of sensibility. I have a few ideas. I want to be a poet, not a philoso-

He recalls learning as a child a story of Alexander the Great being asked, What do you want to be, Homer or Achilles? Paz says Alexander replied, "This is absurd. You ask me if I want to be the hero or the trumpeter of the hero. I want to be the hero." The poet's gentle and, in spite of some lines, almost youthful face, with narrow.

kind, elfin eyes, expands with delight. "I found this answer absurd. I found that to be the trumpeter was much more interesting."
"And since this time I have found that writers, who are not the heroes of history but rather the witnesses of history, the witnesses of life - well, it's important to be a witness." Some of the books for which he is best known, such as "Labyrinth of Solitude" (1950), an essay on the Mexican character, are not poetry. Paz says he never intended to write these books. "No, no. That was an accident," he protests.

He lived several times on both coasts as a child, a young poet and a diplomat. During World War II, as a diplomat in New York, he began thinking of the "Labyrinth of Solitude" to explain why he felt so different from Americans, "Everything was different," he recalls. The book was an attempt to explain

The former diplomat finds that dialogue between the United States and Mexico, to which he says both countries are "condemned," is difficult and often bitter be-cause of historical differences, "We were born in different moments in history," he says. "The U.S. is a true modern country. Mexico is a very old country with a pre-mo-dern past. Not a Western past. The past is still alive."

We are modern and we are not modern," be says. "It is a country of we are and we are We are Western and we are not-... Mexico City is a modern city but it is not very modern. The attitudes of the people are often 16th-, 17th- and 18th-century atti-

HILE he feels these differences deal with the modern world outside," he also thinks Americans for different reasons are unable to deal with foreigners.
The United States "is a country that can accept all foreign things, that is why it is an open country, but when they try to talk with foreigners, they are unable to do it.

From a material and political point of view, the United States is an empire. But don't want to be. They want to be outside of history."

Paz says he even became a diplomat "by accident." His friend, the Chilean poet Pablo Neruda, who was in Mexico as the general consul, first suggested it. "He said to me, You don't have money and you work too much. You should try to find a place in the foreign service and you will work less," Paz

But with 24 years of foreign service behind him, in the United States, Geneva, Japan, 10 years in Paris and six years as ambassador to India, he says, "It gave me another education: I suppose that every man must re-do his own education many times." Paz feels he re-educated himself twice, first in Europe then in Asia.

rary Japanese novels, "It's one of the literatures that is alive for me."

He was struck on a recent trip to Asia to find a resurgence of traditional Japanese theater. "This is not only continuation but revival of traditions. You cannot find, for instance, in Spain or Latin America, Lope de ega or Calderon so easily."

"For the Spanish Catholic tradition ideas ideology is always compact. Totally. And his life is the same. The Japanese and the Chinese are the masters of the conjunction of positions . . . I think Latin Americans should learn more about this experience

. . . this capacity to embrace opposites." But it was his European experiences that made a mark on Latin America, especially his contacts with Andre Breton and the Sur realists. Paz says of his native Mexico, a land where artisans dress fleas in tiny costumes and picnics are held with dead relatives on cemetary lawns, "It is one of the few spontaneously surrealistic countries. I suppose you can be surrealist when you don't know you are surrealist. As soon as you know you are surrealist, it's very difficult to be surrealist."

Paz acknowledges a great debt to Europe. While he still admires some contemporary European writers, especially from Eastern Europe, such as Czeslaw Milosz and Milan Kundera, he says, "I don't suppose a 25-year-old Mexican today would have the same inspiration as we had in the '30s from European culture. But that's a fact. In the United States I don't find great writers such as Faulkner, Eliot or William Carlos Wil-

E also sees this as a quiet moment in Latin American automatical does not mourn the so-called boom does not mourn the so-called boom that made literature of his region fashionable in the 1970s. "This period of silence in Latin American literature is good because I don't believe very much in publicity," he says.

"I think it is very bad for a work of art. One of the bad things in the United States is that they sometimes kill their own writers and their own artists with too much success. Success is as bad as indifference."

But he also says that Latin American literature is quiet because of a change in genera-tions. "A changing of hands," he calls it. "This is a moment when our best novelists and poets are now between 45 and 55 and must do their best work. That we will see in five years," he predicts.

Perhaps the idea of thinking in terms of Europe or Latin America," he says thoughtfully, sinking into a well padded chair, "perhaps all this is a thing of the past, Perhaps we are going to have good literature in different places. I mean one of the facts is that there are no centers now of world civilization. For instance, the last center for art, especially painting, was Paris. Then New York was a center, but New York in some way has different characteristics than Paris. The New York painters are very good but they are not the center of the world."
"Where are the gods, the corn-god, the flower-god, the water-god, the blood-god, the virgin? Have they all died, have they all departed, broken waterjars at the edge of the blocked fount?" he wrote in a celebrated 1955 poem "The Broken Waterjar."

He points out in a rare moment of self indulgence that he was one of the first to talk of the end of modernity as early as 1966 in Paris. "That's why it is very difficult at this moment to discern a movement in Paris or New York or in Mexico."

"We are in the age of diversity and individuality, not movements, not cities, not ereat centers but individual creators, and

The Wild Horses of Merfelder Moor, Or Rodeo as a Princely Tradition

by David Gallowav

ULMEN, West Germany — The thunder of 800 hooves builds the dramatic prelude, and then the panicked animals surge into the arena. While the mares pirouette to shelter their newborn foals, men dart among them to separate the male yearlings from the herd. In teams of two and three the broncobusters wrestle the colts to the ground, bridle them with hemp, and lead them to the blacksmith's forge for branding.

Any resemblance to Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show is purely coincidental. The annual roundup on the Merfelder moor in central Germany began long before William Cody was born. Europe's last genuinely "wild" horses can be officially dated to the year 1316, when a patent for hunting and fishing rights first made written reference to the animals. Like the game that thrived on this gentle plain, the horses had presumably ex-isted here for centuries before, and they were prized as a delicacy for the hunter's table.

Zoologists confirm their prehistoric ancestry, and art historians have noted an uncanny resemblance to the shaggy ponies depict-ed in cave paintings at Lascaux and Altamira. Signs of interpreeding with runaway cavalry mounts or farm horses emerge from time to time, but the dominant types descend from the Mongolian pony or the Russian tarpan. Dun or mouse-gray, they bear a dark stripe from mane to tail, and are both shorter and stockier than their domesti-

The woods and marshes of Westphalia once sheltered numerous herds, but most of them vanished as land was cleared and drained for farming. The Dulmen breed owes its continuing existence to the dukes of Croy, who settled in the area in 1836 and immediately created a refuge for the remaining wildlife. Today the tract encompasses more than 600 acres, and there are plans to incorporate additional woodlands as a buffer against increased traffic from a new autobahn spur.

The case of access has dramatically boosted tourism in one of Germany's most idyllic landscapes. Situated due north of the smoking chimneys of the Ruhr district, the lush Munsterland is dotted with romantic manor houses, moated castles and wide-gabled brick farmhouses. The capital city of Münster, northeast of Dülmen, is celebrated for its medieval town center and Romanesque cathedral, but the charm of the region is in its natural bounty. The market town of Dülmen is ringed by game parks, woods and rhododendron gardens, and tourists are encouraged to rent bicycles to make the picturesque tour. On Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, from March through October, as many as 3,000 visitors pay a call on the wild horses. The animals are herded onto a hillside on those days and enclosed by a temporary fence, but that precaution is among the few concessions to their well-being. Windmills fill water troughs in the dry months, and hay is provided for all the local game when the snows are heavy. Otherwise, the herd ranges free in winter and summer, without shelter or special feeding or the services of a veteri-

NLY the sturdiest foals survive the rigors of winter, but they regularly number 40 colts and 80 fillies. To prevent inbreeding and territorial conflicts. the yearling colts are auctioned off before an enthusiastic audience of 30,000 spectators. It is part rodeo, part carnival, part old-fashioned Volksfest, with pony clubs and trick riders who perform before the herd makes its dramatic entrance. Local farmers and woodsmen drive the animals toward the funnel-shaped fence that spills them into the arena promptly at 3 P.M. on the last Saturday in May.

Easily tamed and put to harness, the longlived Dülmener was once prized by farmers and draymen for its economical, broadshouldered service. Today few of the colts are bought for hard labor, but are ridden by children or hitched to cartloads of tourists taking the air of the Münsterland. As a result, the price has fallen from a high of $300 in the postwar years to an average of $150 at the most recent auction. One American visitor, unable to resist such a bargain, was discovered trying to wedge her new pet into the back seat of a Cadillac.

Farmers on muleback in the Sicilian back country.

Sicily's Rich Mosaic of Cultures

by E. J. Dionne Jr.

FW places in the world are as underrated as Sicily. To many people, and perhaps especially to Americans, Sicily is the land of the Mafia. of poverty, of women in black shawls and tacitum men, of violence and clans and uncertainty. But Sicily may be the most attractive, most culturally privileged place in the complicated, recently established country called Italy.

To begin with, few places have been occu-pied by more foreign powers —that is one of the reasons the Mafia came into being. But it is also the reason why Sicily has some of the best Greek rains in the world; why it has Arab and Norman buildings, and why parts of Palermo look like Bourbon Spain. And whatever damage they did, the occupiers usually — although not always — respected what had been built before they came. The dialect is as much a pastiche as the architecture, with Greek words and French words, Arab words and Spanish.

There are many approaches to Sicily. It can be, like Cyprus or parts of southern France, a place to relax, read and stare peacefully into a sunset. It can be a lesson to be learned, a place that contains pieces of the history of so many other places as well as its own. It is an island where you can eat and drink well, swim and hike up in the mountains. You can even ski. Whatever you choose to do, you can be certain that Sicilians will be warm - although the friendliness toward outsiders can be matched by a certain reserve. You will hear stories of robberies along the roadside, and some of them are true. It is best to adopt a certain caution that the Sicilians practice themselves. But there are other stories, too. Once, when I was driving from Palermo to Trapani, my car broke down. The car stopped near the exit for claim to being the home of the rich pastries called cannoti. I shared a ride into town on a small truck with a newborn calf; the local farmers, the owner of the single cafe in town, the children gathered for their afternoon candy all seemed to want to do whatever they could to get my car moving again. And the cannoli were great. What follows is one approach, with some variations. You can fly to Palermo, Tranani or Catania; then, where you choose to start. how fast you want to go, depend on which Sicily you are seeking.

AORMINA is carved into a hillside that drops 675 feet straight down into . the warm, blue Mediterranean and looks up to snow-capped Mount Etna. Its well-preserved Greek theater, set into the hills, dates from the third century B.C. The best approach is from the Taormina North exit from the main highway. The drive up the mountainside at times cuts through the rocks. To one side are the hills that rise up to the ruined walls of the village of Castelmola; on the other side, a drop straight to the sea. The city has been amply discovered by others, notably Germans and Scandinavians, and it can be crowded, in season and out. But if you are not obsessed with getting away from other people, Taormina amply rewards a visit. Some people spend hours in the terraced gardens behind the San Domenico Palace Hotel in the late afternoon and at dusk, scanning the sky from Mount Ema to the sea. It is the sort of sunset you are unlikely to see anywhere else. Taormina bears a certain resemblance to resorts in southern France, partly because of the quality of the food and accommodations available. Two hotels bear particular men-tion: The San Domenico Palace is a converted 15th-century monastery. The hallways are wide and the room doors are tiny, giving the impression that you are about to enter a monk's spare cell, although the some of the rooms are in fact large. Access to the hillside garden is worth the price of the room, though the food can be uneven. The Hotel Timeo is a good choice for staying, eating, or both. In addition to the view of the mountain and the sea, the terrace looks directly down into a well-maintained garden.

South of Taormina, on the way to Syracuse, leave the main road just north of Cata-nia to explore some of the area's small sea-side towns. Aci Trezza, for example, is part Atlantic City, part Sicilian small town. There is a series of winding back roads through a nich countryside that leads to the sea. In Pozzilo, you can drink one of Sicily's most famous mineral waters at the source and watch the fishermen repair their nets. Catania itself can be passed by, though its cathedral square is worth a look and there are some good restaurants.

Syracuse, 65 miles to the southeast, is a singular reminder of the extraordinary com-plexity of Sicily's past. In its heyday, the city had little to do with Rome or Italy. It was founded by Corinthian colonists in eighth century R.C. and became one of the wealthi-

Greece. (It was also the home of Archimedes, the geometrician.) For this reason, Syracuse has some of the finest Greek ruins in the world. Its theater dates from the fifth century B.C., and Aeshylus' "Persians" had its opening night there. The theater is in the middle of an archaeological park—it closes an hour before sunset—that also includes the Paradise Quarry, a series of remarkable grottoes and caverns.

The old town (Ortygia) is in some senses the new town. The cathedral is built on what were the foundations of the Temple of Minerva. The cathedral and the palazzos on the cathedral square -a lively place in the early evening - offer a series of journeys out of the Greek and into the Baroque. On Sunday afternoons, the whole region seems to descend on the waterfront for a passeggiata. And, as Cicero said, "There's not a day without sun in Syracuse."

If you return to Taormina and then journey north toward Messina the next day, you are in for one of the world's great coastal drives. Keep a map of Italy in your head and watch as the toe of Calabria gets closer and closer until it seems you can almost jump across. The road is a remarkable alternation of tunnels and clear seaside driving. At Messina, you can take a look at the straits; the town itself has suffered badly from earthquakes over the centuries and most of it has een rebuilt since the great tremors of 1908. The northern coast between Messina and Palermo is a long run of small towns and quiet beaches. Two in particular are worth a visit. Cefalth is a small fishing town with a Norman Romanesque cathedral. In his fine book on Sicily, "The Golden Honeycomb," Vincent Cronin reports that the cathedral the votive offering of King Roger II to God for saving him from a storm at sea. According to legend, Roger promised to build a cathedral wherever he was brought to safety and was miraculously brought to what was then the Arab town of Cefalit. "Both the vow and its fulfillment are worthy of a man who combined faith and works, love of beauty and love of battle." Cronin wrote. Battle is about the last thing this peaceful town would bring to mind, although its beaches have spurred a hotel building boom which has not quite gotten out of hand. The town of Collesano, between Cefalit and Palermo, seems like a large bazaar specializing in Sicilian pottery. Some of its kilns have been working since the 16th century.

ALERMO finds its way into the newspapers for organized crime out-rages of all sorts, yet it is both a most modern city and a place where a noble old downtown and rambling outdoor markets beckon. It is a mad collection of blood lines, traditions, architectural styles and sensibilities, a jumble of Norman, Spanish Baroque, Fascist and modern buildings. The Arab influence is still felt, no more so than in the thriving street markets that so on for blooks.

in the center of town. Palermo brings home the cyclical nature of history, the rise and fall of one civilization after another. Palermitans are often said to be cynical, a cynicism that arises from the need to adapt to a bizatre range of occupying powers. This was once an entirely Arab city with scores of mosques, far closer to Tunisia than Milan. Islam was replaced by Christianity, the Arab style by the Norman, the mosques by churches. Then it was a Spanish city and now it is Italian. At certain times in its history, it was one of the important cul-tural centers of Europe.

The extraordinary contradictions of Palermo are brought home on almost every block, in almost every building. The Palace of the Normans, on the highest point of the old city, was built by the Saracens, expanded by the Normans, restored by the Spaniards, it is est and most powerful cities of Greater still the seat of government. Its Palatine

Chapel, built by Roger IL is regarded as one of the most remarkable architectural achievements in all of Italy. Its mosaics are Greek-inspired: its ceiling is of Arab work-manship, and its marble work is Norman. The inscriptions are in Greek, Latin and Palermo is a city that knows poverty, but also extremes of wealth. Its modern center boasts a fashionable shopping district, and Palermitans who talk about the profits of the illegal drug trade point out that while, on paper, the town has one of the lowest average incomes in Italy, it also has one of the highest rates of consumer spending.

Palermo is one of the best places to try Sicilian food. There is fish of all kinds, and the shellfish is excellent (though many would warn that the initial pleasure is not worth the stomach trouble the lobsters and clams might cause you later). Sicilian wine is also worth trying. As throughout Italy, decent wine is remarkably cheap, good wine hardly

HE inland road from Palermo to-Agrigento, on the southern coast, takes you through what might be called the Wyoming of Sicily, a land of scrub brush, vast plains leading to buttes and then to distant mountains. You expect to see Clint Eastwood riding off into the sunset (which he may well have done, since this is the land of spaghetti westerns). The drive, which takes a couple of hours, takes you far away from beach resorts and through sometruly wild terrain.

Agrigento, like Syracuse, offers a remarkable view of ancient Greek civilization. The Valley of Temples rightly draws visitors from all over the world. The Temple of. Concord is the best preserved and the Temple of Hercules is believed to be the oldest; dating back to the sixth century B.C. Other temples in various states of preservation in-clude those to Juno Lacinia, Jove and Castor and Pollux. The area is especially striking atsunrise and sunset.

Southeast of Agrigento is an area not often visited but worth a day trip. Ragusa has two fine Baroque churches, the cathedral of San Giovanni Battista and the church of San Giorgio. Nearby is the castle of Donnafugata, a well preserved manor house built in the 1300s. Comiso, now the home of the NATO missile base, has a rich artisanal tradition; Scicli and Modica are pretty 18th. century towns.

Another trip from Palermo very much worth making is to Trapani and especially to Erice, perched atop Monte San Giuliano. Erice is perhaps the best preserved medieval town in Sicily. Going back many centuries, the town was a religious center to the goddesses of love and fertility of the various leading powers: Astarte of the Phoenicians, Aphrodite of the Greeks and Venus of the Roman. It reached its height of prosperity and importance in the 13th and 14th centuries, and then steadily lost influence to Tra-pani. Its charm lies in its long neglect; today it stands as a beautiful relic to another era. overlooking its now busier rival.

Sicily, associated with bright colors and large gestures, is deceptively subtle, a subtlety related to the Rococo and the Baroque and perhaps also to that sense of the absurd associated with Pirandello, who came from the Agrigento countryside. The people can be just as subtle: a mixture of circumspection and openness, of cunning and warmth.

But however Sicily's contradictions are turned around — whether you choose to regard it as the Orient's gateway to Europe or Europe's door to the Arab world, as the conquered island or the island that absorbed something from everyone — it will reward those who try to understand it, those who

On Bringing the Airport Closer to the Passenger

by Roger Collis

HE problem "of providing a suitable landing platform for flying machines in large cities has always puzzled engineers," wrote the aviation correspondent of The Illustrated London News of the Control of the Illustrated London News of the Control of the Illustrated London News of the Illustrated News of the Illustra don News of Oct. 18, 1919. A futuristic solution at that time was an elevated circular landing strip that would allow pilots "to start and alight dead against the wind as they always must." A neat example of lateral thinking even if the thing never got off the

But finally, modern technology has come up with a better idea: the City of London Stolport (short takeoff and landing airport), which will be built in a derelict dock area in the east of the city specifically to serve the business traveler. The government gave the go-ahead three weeks ago after a rancorous four-year debate with environmentalists and local authorities. The Stolport, which will cost around $15 million, should be operating by mid-1987. It is a seminal idea that may by mid-1987. It is a seminal idea that may have a cascade effect. There is a proposal for a similar installation in Sheffield, serving a population of five million in the north of England. And according to some insiders, pressure may be building up in France for a downtown Stolport in Paris.

"We believe we can cut an hour off the journey time to Paris from the center of London. Our passengers will be landing at Charles de Gaulle before they would take off from Heathrow or Gatwick." says Charles from Heathrow or Gatwick," says Charles Stuart, chairman of Plymouth-based Bry-mon Airways, which will be one of the main carriers to use the Stolport. He asserts that it is only a 20-minute taxi ride from the Bank of England plus 15 minutes to check in and board the plane. Bankers from the Continent could arrive on the morning flights before their counterparts in the City have had time to furl their nmbrellas.

f Cultures,

Brymon plans several flights a day to Paris, Amsterdam and Brussels, with the later possibility of Zurich, Geneva, Antwerp, Rotterdam and Frankfurt, as well as destinations in Britain, such as Aberdeen and Belfast, Jersey European Airways is hoping to fly from the Stolport to Paris, and Manx Airlines has applied for routes to Paris, Brus-sels and Amsterdam.

The Stolport is an example of how regional or commuter airlines are responding to a growing business market by developing a comprehensive network of services across Europe. According to Robert Bonhoff, sec-retary-general of the European Regional Airlines Association in Geneva, regional traffic is growing at a faster rate than that on major airlines. Certainly, many regional carmajor airtines. Certainty, many regional carriers report significant increases in traffic. For example, Crossair in Zurich, which carried 286.000 passengers in 1984, reports a 53-percent increase so far this year, RFG in Dortmund, in northern West Germany, predicts a 50-percent increase in 1985; while Connectair, which has 1,400 passengers a month between Gatwick and Antwerp, respects a lead factor of 65 percent ("As groot ports a load factor of 65 percent ("As good as you're ever going to get without turning people away at peak flights"). And Brymon expects to carry nearly half of the estimated 1.2 million passengers who will use the Stolport in year five or six after its completion.

What the business flier wants is choice, convenience and comfort. This means choice of a convenient airport as well as airline. The so-called national carriers go some way to providing this with business-class cabins, priority check-ins, executive lounges and so on. But you still have the bassle of getting out to far-flung megaports and fighting your way through crowds less dedicated than yourself. For short-hand flights within Europe between major hubs, actual flying time can be as little as 20 percent of total door-to-door journey time.

The solution is to bring the plane to the passenger, either by linking thinner markets to the major hubs (like Plymouth to Paris) or to other small airports (like Plymouth to Cork). After all, how many people who fly to Paris actually want to go to Paris? Regional airlines perform both these roles, providing customized business service almost as if they were scheduled corporate aircraft.

Regional airlines (which typically operate 9- to 40-seat planes) are themselves well. served by advancing technology. The new generation of pressurized turboprops are quiet, fast and comfortable and up to 30 percent more fuel efficient than their predecessors. For example, there is the 33-seat Saab-Fairchild 340, which entered service recently with Crossair; the 30-seat Embraer Brasilia (from the folks who make the Ban-deirante, the DC-3 of commuter planes); the 64-seat Bae Advanced Turbo Prop, which is scheduled to make its maiden flight in August 1986, and the 50-seat four-engined de Havilland Dash 7 - a plane that is not only ultra quiet, but has an exceptional short takeoff and landing performance, being able to descend at a steep seven-degree slope compared with two or three degrees needed for a conventional approach.

It is for these reasons that the Dash 7 is thought to be the only plane capable of operating from the City of London Stolport's 760-meter (828-yard) runway. The Dash 7 has set the limit for noise levels, which are of major environmental concern. Night flights have been banned, weekday flights are limited to 120 a day and 40 on Sundays and public holidays. This will mean an effective limit of about two million passengers a year.

Moreover, for the Stolport to be really effective, you need a similar Stolport at the other end. Until this happens, Stuart is pushing for "STOL" procedures for airports like Charles de Gaulle. "We don't see why we shouldn't operate outside a conventiona pattern; we only need a marginal strip. But this will take a couple of years, I'm sure," he says. Large European airports are far less hospitable to small aircraft than those in the United States.

This highlights a problem for regional carriers. In order for them to develop feeder routes into the major hubs, they need to come to terms with the hegemony of the national airlines, such as Air France at Charles de Gaulle, British Airways at Heath-row and British Caledonian at Gatwick. But many have established a symbiotic relationship, when it is in the national carrier's interest, either by flying regional services under their auspices or "interlining" through their computerized reservations systems. For example. Crossair operates regional flights from Switerzland to Düsseldorf and Paris on behalf of Lufthansa and Swissair: RFG car-nies British Caledonian colors on flights be-tween Dortmund and Gatwick as does Connectair between Garwick and Antwerp; and Air UK, from Norwich to Amersterdam is inked to the KLM reservation system.

Bonhoff believes there is a danger that some national carriers may move in and grab regional routes once they have been built up by smaller airlines. (Lufthansa is already in the business with a 40 percent share in DLT Germany's largest regional airline.) "We need regulatory instruments to identify and stop predatory behavior and abuse of dominant positions. That goes for airports as well as airlines," he says.

Phil Chapman, a director of Air UK, is also apprehensive, especially about the British proposal to deregulate its domestic services except for the busy routes to Heathrow and Gatwick, which means that only the tionals will be exposed to competition. "It only needs a dilution of 5 percent in traffic to make our routes unprofitable. A privatized British Airways could become a monopoly operation in a year. Ninety-four percent of U.S. revenues come from five airlines. God help us over here," Chapman says.

However, deregulation in the United States has spurred the growth of regional airlines, which carried a record 26 million passengers in 1984, an increase of 20 percent on the previous year. And in Europe, moves toward partial deregulation are having a similar catalytic effect.

First has been the liberalizing effect of the recent bilaterals between the Britain and the Netherlands, Belgium and Germany, epitomized by the "open skies" policy in the Netherlands. It is significant that there are now more flights from British regions to Amsterdam and Rotterdam than there are to London. Second has been the inter-regional directive of the European Community, which allows free entry for aircraft carrying up to 70 passengers on routes between "category two" airports. This has met with derision by some regional carriers because it excludes the major hubs ("It's a lousy piece of legislation," Bonhoff says). But it could be the thin end of a deregulation wedge. The directive is due for review in 1986 and there's a good chance that free access will be extended to "category one" airports.

Whether or not this happens, it is to regional airlines that the business traveler will be looking for choice, comfort and conve-

The family resettled in a former forester's house, and Prince Carl Emanuel Ludwig Petrus Eleonore Alexander Rudolf Engelbert, now the 14th duke of Croy, married Princess Gabrielle, granddaughter of the last king of Bavaria. Under Allied occupation there was talk of redistributing the ducal lands, but the greatest threat was a military order to dispose of the wild horses as a useless luxury. The prince promptly de-manded an appointment with the British authorities, and includy discovered "an officer who understood such things."

Today, when the overseer ceremonially informs "His Grace" of the year's catch, the old duke's eyes glisten with sentimental pleasure. At such moments it is difficult to picture this shy, gentle presence as one of the shrewdest (and least known) speculators of based in Wuppertal, West Germany.

The duke's children have inherited the work ethic that now complements a sense of noblesse oblige. Like his father, Prince Rudolf studied law and he has completed an apprenticeship at company headquarters in Toronto. Prince Stefan works for a London stockbroker, while Princess Marie-Theresa is studying Spanish at Munich University in preparation for examinations as a simultaneous translator.

Not surprisingly, even the "losing business" of horsebreeding is managed with strict, no-nonsense professionalism. Before the buffer zone protecting the herd can be extended, complex reallocations of land will have to be negotiated by the 20-man team that administers "Croy and Co." Only on the last Saturday in May, when relatives gather from throughout the world and the youngest is paraded round the arena behind a brisk span of Dilmeners, are the workaday realities temporarily forgotten.

Dining in Châteauroux: Lost in the Salt

The clear, positive note of the meal came in the form of truly exquisite civet de honard, a bright, fresh blend of lobster, sprinkled with slivers of lime and a hint of ginger, flavors that were brought together with a full-flavored Sauternes-based sauce. With it, the friendly, chatty sommelier offered a single glass of Sauternes to complement the bster preparation.

Shimoda: Japan's Opening to the West

by Christine Chapman

HIMODA, Japan - For Westerners traveling to Japan, going to the port city of Shimoda is a romantic journey into the history of Japan's foreign affairs. Fact, legend, pomp and pageant mingle in this lovely town on the southeastern tip of the Izu peninsula, about 100 miles from Tokyo. Its setting is reminiscent of views from the Grande Corniche or, as some Shimodians say, of Monterey in California. Unsatisfactory from the beginning as a trad-ing port, Shimoda was the symbol to the ruling Tokugawa Shogun that, for better or worse, Japan's isolation had ended. Japan's 200-year-old posture as an inter-national recluse was abandoned when Commodore Matthew C. Perry arrived in Uraga harbor in Tokyo Bay on July 8, 1853. Al-though Russians and English had tried to establish trade agreements with Japan, they failed. Rebuffed by the Japanese and refused support by their own governments, their ships withdrew. The Portuguese were expelled from Japan in 1638; from 1641, only a few Dutch merchants were allowed to remain on Deshima Island in Nagasaki Bay.

Perry was the emissary of a U.S. government determined to force the issue. American whaling boats were the object of ill treatment. The Americans wanted respect for their seamen, a port of call for supplies, and the promise of Japan as a trading partner. When Perry entered Uraga, he not only beat out the Russian expedition ordered by Czar Nicholas II, by one month, he also flaunted four men-of-war and an insistent letter from President Millard Fillmore. He warned the Japanese that he would return to resume negotiations, and he did half a yea later with more ships. On March 31, 1854, Perry signed a treaty with the Japanese that opened the ports of Shimoda and Hakodate in the north to American ships. Japanese treaties with other nations (c lowed in quick succession: Britain in 1854; Russia and the Netherlands in 1855. With his fearsome kurofune - "black ships" - Perry was the first to force Japan to open its ports, and his countryman Townsend Harris was the first foreign consul to make Shimoda Japan's laboratory in inter-national diplomacy. A thoughtful man, the 52-year-old Harris showed his mettle during a year in Shimoda while he waited to meet the shogun in Edo, later Tokyo. "The Complete Journal of Townsend Harris," published in 1930, then in a revised edition in 1959, could serve as a manual for Western diplomats to Japan. Harris's resolute approach and his sense of fair play won the respect of the Japanese. He was not overly patronizing and he had his zeal in check. He knew what he — and the U.S. government -wanted from Japan. He got it, not without some qualms of conscience.

On Sept. 4, 1856, after he hoisted the U.S. fing before his headquarters in the Gyoku-senji temple, he wrote in his journal: "Grim reflections — oming of the cod. Query — if for the real good of Japan?"

Perhaps Shimoda would admit today that Harris's intrusion was for the common good, but in 1856, the town fathers tried to dissnade him from settling there. When he in-sisted on his right as granted by the treaty, they did "civilly ask me to go away." But he unloaded his gear and invited Shimoda officials on board his ship to watch the men

"exercise at the guns."

The Japanese installed Harris and his interpreter in the temple and began a series of delaying tactics that presaged future contacts between the two countries.

To any request, Japanese officials explained that "they had to reflect on every new proposition a long time; that they could not decide as quickly as the men of the West." Experienced in living in the Orient, as a trader on his own merchant ship, Harris had completed a U.S. commercial treaty with the king of Siam before arriving in Japan. He knew and loved Asia and considered as he neared Shimoda that this "may be the beginning of a new order of things in

As soon as he was at home in Gyokusenji temple, today a major tourist site, he started to ramble over the hills. He wrote that "a more genial climate than that of Shimoda, so far, is not to be found in the world."

E appreciated the weather, the flowers, the crops and, finally, the peo-ple. He was often exasperated, but he was patient. By November 1857, when he was allowed to go to Edo, he was convinced the Japanese were a "singular people." The journal details his growing affection for them, and theirs for him, but he shows his anger when he writes: "I will cordially meet any real offers of amity, but words will not do. They are the greatest liars on earth." When the Japanese tried to amuse him, he commented: The lubricity of these people passes belief. I was asked a hundred different questions about American females." One of the officials was in charge of providing Harris, a bachelor, with a woman. He said, "if I fancied any woman the Vice-

Governor would procure her for me." David Galloway is a writer and professor the abandoned Okichi, Harris's alleged geisha-turned-concubine. The 16-year-old girl

"There was nothing between Townsend Harris and Okichi," insisted Satoshi Furukawa, chairman of the Shimoda Historical Society. "It was a story concocted for publicity about 60 years ago. Actually Okichi was a laundress who served Harris as a nurse for three days once when he became ill. When he recovered, she was dismissed. We have a document from her mother saying Okichi was fired and deserved a pension."

Each year from May 16 to 18 Shimoda holds its Black Ships Festival to commemo-rate Perry's arrival in the painted vessels. It has all the hoopla of an American Fourth of July. American ships, now steel-gray, lie at anchor in the harbor; thousands of sailors in uniform roam the town; American and Japanese dignitaries make speeches and ride in a parade through the city; high school and military marching bands strut their stuff, and elaborate fireworks explode over the harbor at night.

Last month U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield rode in an open car with Mayor Kyoshi Iketani of Shimoda, waving to the crowds lining the streets, grasping hands, supposedly gave up her true love, a simple and patting babies on the head. From his car carpenter, to serve the American. The legend Rear Admiral Gerald W. MacKny handed small American flags to outstretched hands.

Shimoda's population of 30,700 (it was 3,924 when Harris arrived) swells during the summer as swimmers and surfers descend on thair that carried Okichi to Harris. Tourism is Shimoda's principal industry, with fishing its second source of income. The wharves of the island city are lively to stroll along and tourists can go fishing or at least sailing in the harbor in an up-to-date black ship. Apart from the three-day festival in May, July and August are Shimoda's busiest, and most expensive, months. But the weather is good in spring, fall, and early winter. A telephone call to the Tourist Information Center in Tokyo (tel: 502-1461) will inform you about weather, botels, trains.

The "law of contrary" reason triumphed, belittling door prophets who, to paraphrase. Oscar Wilde; "know the price of everything and the value of nothing." Since

U.S. Adopts Laser Method In Uranium Enrichment

By ERIC N. BERG

New York Times Service EW YORK - It is billed as the state-of-the-art technology in uranium enrichment, a step that will create jobs, help restore the U.S. government's dominance in uranium sales and possibly reduce energy costs for thousands of households and businesses. However rosy it may sound, that was what the Energy Department was saying last week when it announced that it was abandoning two longstanding techniques for enriching uranium for nuclear power plants and weapons and would concentrate instead on a newer, more efficient, less costly technique. Although the new approach, called the "atomic vapor laser isotope separation" process, has many problems that must be overcome and although it would not be used until 1995. department officials are confident that they have chosen the best technology.

"Our conclusion is that this is the way of the next century," said John R. Longenecker, who is the deputy assistant secretary of energy for uranium enrichment. "It's the world's best way of enriching

As it comes out of the ground, uranium ore cannot be used as fuel for nuclear power plants and weapons. The ore contains two isotopes of uranium, but only one of them, uranium 235, can support a nuclear reaction. And U-235 occurs in tiny quantities in ore—less than 1 percent of a given sample. Enrichment, which in the United States is performed only by the government because of the costs and risks involved, raises the U-235 content in uranium ore to should reserve in uranium ore to about 4 percent. The current technique for enriching prantum was developed during World War II as part of the Manhattan Project. Known as the gaseous-diffusion method, the technique worked on the principle of passing viranium ore in gas form through a filter that would collect the U-235. Although the method worked well, it required a tremendous amount of energy to force the gas through the filters. Another curichment technique used today, called the gas-centrifuge process, requires far less energy than the first method but is extremely costly because of the large number of huge, high-speed centrifuges that must be purchased.

O THE government has been seeking a cheaper, more efficient way to gather U-235 for enriching uranium, and it thinks it has found such a process with atomic vapor laser isotope separation.

The technique, which was developed a decade ago by scientists at Hughes Aircraft Co. and Exxon Corp. and has since been refined at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory, starts by vaporizing uranium ore through the application of intense

The vapor is then placed in a "separation chamber," a shooting gallery of sorts, in which it is bombarded with laser beams. They ionize the U-235 in the ore — that is, they give it a negative charge. That causes the U-235 to be attracted to positively charged metal plates inside the separation chamber. Scientists can then draw off the U-235 to enhance other uranium ore.

"You are just separating out the various components, and you've got enriched uranium," Mr. Longenecker said.

The attractiveness of the method is its cost. While an enrichment plant based on centrifuges would require 28 acres (11 hectares), Mr. Longenecker estimates that one based on lasers might occupy only one-fourth that space. The equipment for such a plant, he says, would cost roughly one-third as much as for a centrifuge plant. And although laser complexes require more electricity than centrifuge facilities, the current is still well below the level consumed in the older techniques.

That being the case, the government hopes to save hundreds of millions of dollars annually on the cost of producing nuclear fuel. That could go far, uranium experts say, toward restoring its leadership in the business of selling enriched uranium. Although

U.S. Sales Fell 0.8% For May

April Figures Revised Upward

By John M. Berry Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — Retail sales in the United States fell 0.8 percent in May, but the ligures for the previous month were revised upward sharply to show a 2.4-percent gain, the Commerce Department reported Thursday. The large upward revision for April. primarily the result of a much higher figure for antomobile sales, means that the average level of sales for the two months, $114.2 billion, was 2.2 percent higher than the average for the first quarter of the year.

The May decline left sales 5.3 percent higher than they were in May 1984. The figures are adjusted for seasonal variations and differences in the number of selling days, but not for inflation.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the figures indicated that "consumer demands are grow-ing at a healthy pace."

Large increases in disposable incomes, boosted by tax refunds, should stimulate spending in Some analysis, however, inter-preted the retail sales data much less bullishly. Among other things, part of the higher consumer de-mand is being satisfied increasingly with goods produced abroad, adding to the nation's trade deficit rather than to domestic production and payrolls, analysis said. Sandra Shaber of Chase Econometrics said the erratic month-tomonth change was due in part to delayed distribution of income-tax refunds. The end of formal quotas on Japanese auto imports has also affected the figures, she said.

The advance report on April sales showed only a 0.9-percent in-crease over the month before, with auto sales, which account for about 20 percent of total sales, falling 2.7 percent. Those advance figures, as usual, were based on reports from only about 2,500 companies.

With more complete information from a sample of 15,000, the April figure was revised upward.

Dollar Higher In New York

United Press International NEW YORK — The dollar closed higher Thursday when a disappointing May retail sales report was offset by a sharp upward revision in the figures for April.

The dollar was off following

The dollar was off following a report that retail sales slipped in May, but turned upward again in response to a revision to a 2.4-percent gain in April.

The British pound was at $1.2660 in New York, down a notch from $1.2676.

Other New York prices and Wednesday rates included: 3.0930 German Dentsche marks, up from 3.0905; 2.6070 Swiss francs, up from 2.6015; 9.43 French francs, up from 9.4125; 1.968 Italian fire, up from 1.961; and 249.40 Japanese were down from 240.78 nese yen, down from 249.78.

NEW YORK — Argentina paid $250 million in overdue interest

Wednesday to its creditor banks around the world, as the United States and other governments pre-pared to lend Buenos Aires about $450 million more.

The payment makes Argentina current on interest payments up to Dec. 30, 1984, and reduces its interest arrears to commercial banks to about $1 billion. The bridge loan by the various governments will al-

"The payment is another posi-tive step by the government of Ar-gentina," said William R. Rhodes, committee of banks negotiating with Buenos Aires. He said it would help the banks put into place a long-delayed rescheduling of Argentina's foreign debt. The payment will also improve Argentina's position before an in-teragency commune of American bank regulators that is meeting in Washington. The regulators are re-viewing whether to downgrade Argentine debt, which could require banks to set aside substantial re-cants to set aside substantial toserves against their loans to Argentina. A lower credit rating for Argentina would also make it more difficult to arrange the new loans

U.S. Cable Firms See Salvation In New Venture

Richard W. Stevenson New York Times Service NEW YORK — The cable

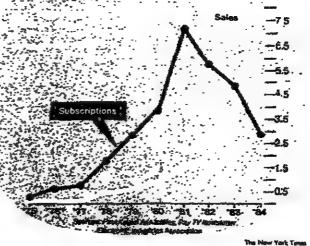

television industry feels under siege. It is facing growing compo-tition for viewer attention from the boom in video-cassette re-corders, and as fewer new cable systems are built it is having trouble wooing and holding new വർഗേർക്ക

Those problems have cable programming networks seeking another way to attract audiences. and some of them think they have found it in pay-per-view

Two networks, Showtime/The Movie Channel and The Playboy Channel, announced plans last week for pay-per-view opera-tions, and a third company, called The Exchange, is develop-ing a similar offering.

Pay-per-view allows cable sub-scribers to pay a small fee to see a scribers to pay a small fee to see a specific movie or other special programming. Subscribers can get pay-per-view instead of, or in addition to, the continuous programming they now receive for a monthly fee from so-called pay-cable networks such as Showtime or Time Inc.'s Home Box

"Of all the new developments emerging in the ever-changing field of pay television, we feel that pay-per-view offers the greatest opportunity for continned expansion and growth," said Que Spalding, president of the mming Distribu-

Not everyone is so optimistic. Cable industry skeptics say that pay-per-view will just draw viewers away from pay cable. Others contend that the necessary tech-nology is not yet widely avail-able, and that getting sufficient high-quality programming will be difficult.

The systems would work like this: The network would advertise its offerings to cable subscribers, and would broadcast the programming via satellite to local cable operators at scheduled times. The cable operator in turn would transmit the programming to those subscribers who had called and requested it.

The viewer would be billed $4 to $5 for a chance to see a movie well before it is shown on pay cable, and probably at about the same time it becomes available on video cassette. Eventually, sporting events, live concerts and other specials might also be of-

Sperry Opens Merger Talks With Burroughs

By Tim Bovee

DETROIT — Burroughs Corp. and Sperry Corp. said Thursday they were discussing a merger that would create the world's secondlargest computer maker, but analysts were skeptical the multi-billion-dollar marriage would work.
"It will probably make them more competitive, but it is not certain that one and one is going to make more than two, It may in fact make less than two," said Dave Terrie, senior analyst with The Yankee Group, a Boston-based market research and consulting

Burroughs and Sperry, in a brief announcement, said they were "engaged in negotiations with respect to a common stock merger of the two companies." Neither company elaborated on the statement.

A transaction merging the two companies could be worth nearly common stock shares of each.

$6 billion, based on the value of the Burroughs stock closed Thursday at $56.25, down $3.125. Sperry traded at $56.25, off 50 cents.

Sperry, with $5.2 billion in sales last year, is the larger of the two companies. But part of its business is in non-computer fields such as military electronics, aviation controls and farm equipment. The firm is based in New York.

You can see some synergy in trying to compete for government business, but what do you do after The discussions with Burroughs were Sperry's second recent attempt at a merger. Sperry and ITT Corp. in March announced they had held merger discussions but were unable to reach an agreement. Mr. Elling said the announcement of merger talks now had little to do with the state of the computer industry, which this year is facing the prospect of reduced profits. "It seems like Sperry has been a live one, so to speak," Mr. Elling said. "They obviously made it be known that they were talking to ITT and they were available." Burroughs employs 65,000 peo-ple in the United States and 12 foreign countries. Sperry has a workforce of nearly 78,000 people. Burroughs' 1984 profits totaled $244.9 million, Sperry's profits in its fiscal year ending March 31 totaled $286.7 million.

House Panel Approves Interstate Bank Bill

banks could spread across more state lines while getting less compe-tition from outside the industry under legislation approved by the House Banking Committee.

The committee voted Wednesday to replace regional banking compacts with full interstate banking. In five years, only states that bar any interstate banking could avoid opening their borders to all

Hongkong Land To Sell Excelsion

HONG KONG - Hong Kong's leading property com-pany, Hongkong Land Co., agreed on Thursday to sell one of its hotels to overseas inves-tors to ease debt liabilities totaling about 12 billion Hong Kong dollars ($).5 billion).

Martin Spurrier, a company spokesman, said the sale of the 950-room Excelsior, to be completed by the end of the month. was above market value, Stock analysts estimated the market value at about 830 million dolbanks, circumventing rules designed to keep the banking system separate from other industries.

The bill would require divestiture of all so-called non-bank banks created after May 9, 1984. The 109 such operations approved before that date would be allowed to continue, but could not expand.

The interstate banking bill, approved 31-to-18, would allow states to band together to exclude outside banks only through July 1, 1990, or for two years after joining such a compact, whichever date is later. After that, a state allowing any outside banks could no longer ban any bank based on geography.

The vote was a victory for big banks in New York and California. who were losers in a Supreme Court ruling on Monday that sanctioned a pact between Massachusetts and Connecticut aimed at preventing major New York banks from moving in Similar multi-state compacts have been formed in the Southeast and the Northwest.

The Supreme Court's decision was similar to language passed by the Senate last year. As a result, Senator Jake Garn, Republican of Utah and chairman of the Senate Banking Committee, has taken in-terstate banking "off the table" as his panel works on an omnibus banking bill, a committee source

Toyota to Pay A 5-for-100 Stock Dividend

NAGOYA — Toyota Motor Corp. will pay a 5-for-100 stock dividend and hopes to raise its cash dividend to 16 yen (.06 cent) for the year ending lune 30, 1985, from 14 yen, Shoichiro Toyoda, the company president, said Thursday.

He said parent company cur-rent profit this year would ex-ceed the estimated 600 billion yen ($2.4 billion), on sales of about 6 trillion yen, higher than the estimated 5.9 trillion.

This compares with the re-cord 521.77-billion current profit on record sales of 5.473 trillion a year earlier. Mr. Toyoda said the upward revision is due to the dollar's strength against the yen and a steep rise in exports to China. The stock dividend will bring the capital to 2.67 billion shares valued at 133.30 billion year.

Jobless Rate is Now. A Liability for Kohl

scheduled to go to trial Aug. 29. Analysts said that a key question for the next national elections in February 1987 would be whether the government could push unemployment below 2 million, a level reached in 1983 during Mr. Kohl's lirst full year in office and one viewed as a critical psychological threshold among voters.

A recent survey by the Infas re-search institute found that since his party's poor showing in the North Rhine-Westphalia election, Mr. Kohl's popularity has dropped sig-nificantly below that of the Hans-Jochen Vogel, the Social Democrat candidate for chancellor in national elections in March 1983.

During the last week of May, Mr. During the last week of May, Mr. Wogel pulled ahead of Mr. Kohl by o percentage points, the first time that the opposition has overtaken Mr. Kohl by a margin larger than 5 percentage points, an Infas analyst said. For a head-to-head race, the response was 42 percent for Mr. Vogel, 36 percent for Mr. Kohl and 22 percent undecided

22 percent undecided. Such losses of support have left Mr. Kohl's coalition partners un-settled about their own electoral prospects, particularly in regional elections next year in Lower Saxony and Bavaria. They also are concerned about other negative eco-comic factors. For example, West Germany's GNP fell I percent in the first quarter of 1985 from 1984's fourth quarter, although that drop could be partly explained by severe win-ter weather. That decline has raised some doubts about whether, the economy would be able to grow at the 2.5-percent annual rate predicted by Bonn. Mr. Bangemann has sufficiently concerned with the per-said that 2.5-percent growth could reduce the number of unemployed by 100,000 by December from a year earlier. But Otto Schlecht, senior economist in the Economics Ministry, acknowledged that after assessing disappointing first-quarter developments, the government has backed off from its earlier projection that average unemployment this year would be lower than the 2.27 million in 1984.

"Average unemployment in 1985 will be as high or possibly higher than last year," Mr. Schlecht said. Mr. Kohl defended his austerity program this week in West German

"A tax cut in one step would not be financially sound," he said, add-ing that any retreat from stable price and interest-rate policy would only create a short-term ignition" of growth with no lasting

Despite the economy's uncertain start in the first quarter, Mr. Kohl and Finance-Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg have rejected opposi-tion calls for job-creation programs and suggestions for the one-stage. 8-percent tax cut from condition partners and leading economic in-propose legislation to increase spending during next month's cabinet debate on the 1986 budget.

Despite the proposed spending increase, the Kohl government has said that it would not expand the 25-billion-DM hudget deficit projected for 1986. The fear is that any deficit expansion could trigger a loss of business confidence.

Mr. Lambsdorff, Mr. Strans and other key coalition politicians remain frustrated that the government's tight fiscal policies seems to

Electricity Supply Commission, South Africa

BALANCE SHEET

Highlights from the Chairman's Review and Financial Statements for the year ended 31 December 1984

The electricity supply industry in South Africa in 1984 was subject to low major influences; the state of the economy; Escour's financial position; the performance of the electricity supply system; and a proposed new management and control structure for Escour.

ELECTRICATY SUPPLY AND THE ECONOMY

Following new, hower estimates of long-term growth in gross domestic radiact, Escam adjusted its copital expansion projections downwards from any even go below the other mannual average growth rate of 7% to 6%, and may even go below the depending on future economic conditions.

For nearly 15 years Escam has provided flexibility in its power station construction programme, chowing for the deformant, or concellation, of lating generating sets if this should become necessory.

This policy was followed in 1984 when a number of such generating sets and other projects were deformed, in present Rond volume the deformation represent a reduction in capital expenditure of R8 BOC million over the east lenyears. Total capital expenditure for this period is now estimated of S6 BOC million and the rest lenyears. Total capital expenditure for this period is now estimated of ISS 400 trillion.

FRUARICAL POSITION Internal financing generoted by the Copital Development Fund has declined steadily sincer 1980, in 1984 if represented 26,5% of copital expenditure, compared with a tight of 4,3% in 1980. The present coverage of copital expenditure by the Copital Development Fund is not regarded as solitationly in the long latth. Escorn has allowed the coverage to drop lemporarity in the hope of obtaining some short-form economic gains for the country, threaters, in the larger term? with be successory to increase themal financing to of least 30% of capital expenditure, investors will be watching the situation constituty and it is doubthat whether the present tower rates of informationancing will be occupied as sound practice.

THE SUPPLY STREEM
A mojor activement in 1984 was the commissioning of the Basi generating set of Koeberg, Atrica's fast audieur power station. It performed well in 1984 and to its first six months generated 4 CCC stillion KN/s.

NEW MULAMERSHIP AND CONTROL STRUCTURE.

The new Beckfelly Council as legislated for in 1985 will, like the present Beckfelly Council as legislated for in 1985 will, like the present Beckfelly Supply Commission, determine Escam's policy and objectives and lang-term planning, it will also control performance by Secam of its functions, the exercise of its powers and the fulfilment of its chies. The Management Board will manage Escam's affairs in accordance with the policy and objectives determined by the Beckfelly Council. The Management Board will be appointed by the Beckfelly Council.

PROSPECTS

South Africa is going through a difficult phose of adjustment to secure sound economic development. The electricity supply industry has responded well to the electricity of the are land, sying to contain damp costs and, on the other hand, adopting a flexible approach in its capital expansion programme. The objective of this response is reliable to burden furnishment with unduly high costs por to projudice flaure consumers with unduly high costs por to projude a flaure economic growth of the Parachite his inadequate provisions for electricity demand.

Industry analysts agree that the system has potential, but warn that t will not be a panacea. "It's the electronic version of going down to the tape-rental store," said Alan J. Proponents of the plan argue that even though a $4-to-$5 price is a few dollars more than the cost of renting a tape, consumers will be willing to pay it because they will avoid a trip to the tape-rental store, which is often out of the most popular movies.

People aren't willing to take just any old thing anymore. There isn't that much that's worth paying for." The industry itself is somewhat divided over the prospects for this ewest programming option.

competing interests make powerful and con-flicting demands. Since these demands drive the price of fiction up (and the value down), Newman takes the opportunity to excoriate these competitors, whether they are formalists or realists, avant-gardists or neo-conservatives, neo-realists, structuralists, deconstructionists Freudians, believers in the anxiety of influence, or criers after a revival of moral fiction.

THE POST-MODERN AURA: The Gass's war against pseudo-art hasn't posited Act of Fiction in an Age of Inflation "literature as a closed organism, a factory in which curiosity about what is fabricated and By Charles Newman, with a preface by what is the goal of its labor are apparently questions outside its design." In response to Smal Bellow's competing endorsement of tradi-Gerald Graff. 203 pages. Hardcover, tion, Newman argues trenchantly that despite "its clear limitations." Gass's formalist "can no longer be countered by a simple appeal to admissible content."

Elsewhere, he delivers an especially cogent. critique of perceptual relativism: The literary "enthronement of the perceiver" who says "it all depends on your point of view" is "of course only the most egregious Humanist misreading of Modern physics, which ignores not only the I N THIS dazzling yet penetrating study of contemporary art — by which he unabashedly means almost nothing but contemporary fiction — Charles Newman would seem to elegant and exeruciating step-by-step method-ology which characterizes the true scientific method, but also the horror which always accompanies the discovery of new evidence which cannot be explained in an old context."

Yet Newman also means it literally when he treats contemporary fiction as a marketplace commodity; or, to put it another way, metaphor is as serious as any description of reality. In the rebellion of Modernism against Tradition, the New unquestionably pitted itself against entrenched authority, he argues. But in the transition from Modernism to Post-Modernism and "Second Resolution" that Modernism — a "Second Revolution" that began about the time of World War II — the nature of the competition changed. The strug-gle between the left and the right became lost in the bigger game of oligopoly, or the market condition that exists when there are few enough sellers to fix prices irrespective of sup-ply and demand. The object of the game be-came to buy both guns and butter. The price was rampant inflation, devaluing even the tegrity of serious fiction.

The foregoing summary, of course, is a vast oversimplification of Newman's exquisitely complex argument, whose prose can be daunting enough to beg comparison with Hegel. In this elementary version, it may seem to echo every variety of social critic from John Ken-neth Galbraith to Herbert Marcuse to William Irwin Thompson. But Newman delivers the goods: His anatomy of the contemporary pubshing scene is as deadly as his evisceration of

If "The Post-Modern Aura" has any major failing besides its suffocating verbal density, it is a lack of concrete examples of what the author considers promising in current fiction. But even this lack of illustration has its benefits. Newman is so evocative that the mind is pressured willy-nilly to play with possibilities. One is eventually reminded of a talk that the poet Reed Whittemore gave a few years ago in which he conceived of Yeats's "rough beast" slouching "towards Bethlehem" as the emergence of new and hitherto unimagined literary forms.

In "The Post-Modern Aura," Newman, despite his sometimes inhospitable prose, succeeds in evoking Years's "sands of the desert." I had always thought of the rough beast as ugly and threatening. In "The Post-Modern Aura," Newman, as Whittemore did in his talk, makes its arrival an event to be anticipated with something almost like hope and relief.

Chief's Crown, Once Vulnerable, Pulls Away from the Pack to Become Derby Favorite

New York Times Service
LOUISVILLE, Kentucky — Last week, Chief's Crown looked like one of at least half a dozen colts with about equal chances of winning the 111th Kentucky Derby Saturday, and most of the racing world considered him a vulnera-

Now he is the strongest Derby favorite in six years and a legitimate aspirant for a sweep of the Triple Crown.

It took the small, bay-colored colt one minute 47 3/5 seconds to change the Derby picture—his running time in the Blue Grass Stakes on April 25. He had been expected to win the race easily, but not to run in sizzling time or to get stronger with every furlong, running his last splits faster than his early ones.

While the revisionist view of Chief's Crown is probably closer to the truth than the cloud of doubt under which he had raced until the Blue Grass, the Derby is still no walkover. What had looked like the worst crop of 3-year-olds in a decade is beginning to blossom, and Chief's Crown still has a few things to prove. He is bettable at odds of 9 to 5, slightly off the pace, turned in a strong prove. He is bettable at odds of 9 to 5, but not unbeatable.

About the only people who were neither surprised not impressed by Chief's Crown's Blue Grass were those closest to him, the trainer Roger Laurin and the jockey Donald MacBeth.

His next start proved to be his only defeat in the past 10 months, but it was also the that convinced Laurin just how good the colt might be. It was the Futurity at Belmont, and the track was sloppy. Chief's Crown broke sharply but then began dropping back steadily. MacBeth could tell that the colt hated the track.

"Then he began running, picking off those horses one by one like he didn't want to lose," MacBeth said. "It really showed a character.

The colt fell a length short of catching Spectacular Love, but he had been more impressive than ever before, and he has not lost since. He came back to drown a weak Cowdin field by six lengths. Chief's Crown struggled a bit to win the Norfolk at Santa Anita, but was dead sharp for the Breeder's Cup race, bulling his way through a large field to score over Tank's Prospect and Spead A Buck, two Derby rivals.

Laurin now thinks it may have been a blessing. Chief's Crown got a late start, delaying his debut until the Swale Stakes March 2, but he is coming into the Derby fresher than many of his rivals. Laurin thinks the colt is peaking at just the right

His races this year support that theory. In the Swale, he did not have to work hard to beat a moderate field going seven furlongs. He ran back four weeks later in the Flamingo. He was disquali-fied and placed second for possible interference in a call so controversial that the decision was reversed 10 days later. Then came the 11/2-mile Blue Grass, in

The one thing he has missed this year is real competition or any adversity of any kind. Although all his victories last year were earned from off the pace, this year he has found himself on the lead without a straw in his path every time.

"That's just coincidence," Laurin said. "We never wanted the lead. When they stop running such slow fractions, we'll stop being on the lead. I can't see him being in front all the way Saturday."

That is indeed unlikely with one-dimensional front-rupners such as Eternal Prince and Spend A Buck in the race. Chief's Crown figures to be slightly off their pace and then to make his move on

People talk about how horses could win by more if they were pressed, or how they do just barely enough to win. I don't buy the idea of horses figuring out the minimum they have to do to win and then doing Veitch gets an argument on that score from Eddie Sweat, Chief's Crown's groom. Sweat knows a little about what it takes to win a Derby, having been the groom for Riva Ridge and Secretariat. who won the Derby in 1972 and 1973 while working for the trainer Lucien Laurin, Roger's father.

Speaking of waxing and waning heat, I haven't seen anything in The Times lately about Prince or Michael Jackson. What is the state of their heat? It is not easy to keep abreast of the rock-star news when the newspaper of record deals with it only sporadically, but I try heaven knows. I try.

It seems scarcely a year ago that the hottest of all possible stars was Michael Jackson, but while still digesting that fact I was astonished to hiscover that tremendous heat was suddenly being exuded by Prince, a male rock star whose wardrobe includes an ankle-length blanket of purple seguins.

The athletic department vetoed plans for Springsteen concerts on Sept. 4 and 5 at 60,000-seat Folsom Field cause they said the shows would interfere with preparations for the university's home opener against Colorado State on Sept. 7. Students say the concert could have earned the school's financially troubled athletic department up to $250,000.
